To the Counselor or Teacher:

This guide is intended as a resource for you as you work with students who have learning disabilities. Community colleges can provide an excellent entry into higher education for students with learning disabilities. The information provided in this guide describes services and accommodations allowed for students with learning disabilities at two-year community colleges in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and Florida. For additional information about any of these colleges, please write the individual college.

To the Student:

Students with learning disabilities can and are succeeding in college when they are provided appropriate services and accommodations. However, you must be willing to disclose your disability and must request services and accommodations. Choosing the right college may be one of the most important decisions of your life. You may wish to explore community colleges as you prepare for college. Most of these colleges do not require an ACT or SAT score for admission, have small student/faculty ratios, and can provide you with the individual attention that you need to be successful. This guide describes community colleges in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and Florida that have services for students with learning disabilities. For additional information about any of these college, please write the individual college.
